

Summary from OCDP “Listening Session with the Chair”

Purpose of meeting: The Chair of OCDP, Jody Job, heard the Black community's concerns and made a decision to host listening sessions where our Black community members could voice their questions and concerns. To ensure these meetings are a safe and equitable space, we asked Stephanie Crider and Amy Mindell, OCDP volunteers, to assist with planning and moderating the listening sessions. This document serves as “running notes” so that all members of OCDP have access to the information that was discussed. The OCDP will be working on action items that we can present at the next listening session.

The first listening session with community members was held on November 6th, 2021.

The second listening session included elected officials and was held on January 8th, 2022.

Next Meeting: March 5th, 12-2pm

State Representative Brenda Carter:

I introduced Michigan House Resolution 123 of 2019 to directly address Black maternal mortality. As a Black mother, who lost a child, I know first hand the plight of Black women. Please read the resolution that was adopted in the House of Representatives.

Here is some info about a bill Senator Geiss introduced regarding doula care access last term, I don't think it has been reintroduced yet:

Senator Chang has facilitated a Girls Making Change fellowship for the past 6 years for high school girls of color (predominantly Black/Latina) every year as a way to provide opportunities for leadership/community action training, shadowing elected women of color and work on a community action project in the community.

Commissioner Janet Jackson:

Oakland County Board of Commissioners resolved “Racism as a Public Health Crisis” after the George Floyd murder. We increased promotion and health care services at our Southfield and Pontiac health divisions. Covid information, testing and vaccines have been instituted in conjunction with our black churches and public schools as outreach into our communities has been strengthened during the pandemic.

Congressman Andy Levin:

A few ideas on strategies: (1) Hire Black people and for important positions in your official office! (2) Organize special events. In my case, I organized a series of anti-racism workshops for constituents and created an annual MLK student summit. (3) Introduce and co-sponsor legislation to transform the power structure and empower African Americans and other people of color. There are so many examples. Here are a few:

- Bobby Rush’s Emmett Till Anti-Lynching Act
- Sheila Jackson-Lee’s bill to set up commission to study/develop proposals for reparations
- Ayanna Pressley’s Ending PUSHOUT Act (to stop discriminatory school discipline victimizing Black girls)

How about this to engage young Black voters - extend the voting age to 16! That's something I voted for, but less than 100 Dems went along (much less, any Republicans!). I guess big change takes time.

One other important strategy, to me, is not only to introduce bills that focus on racial justice, but to include racial justice in every bill we pass. An example from my own work is my EV Freedom Act, which is mostly about installing EV chargers throughout the nation’s highway system so people can drive EVs anywhere without fear of running out of juice. But the bill also requires that fully 50% of the spending occur in frontline and vulnerable communities. And it focuses on adding chargers in BIPOC-rich communities where people may live in apartments or small houses that do not have personal garages where they can charge their cars.

Another strategy that feels important is tackling racism globally. One amazing country I have long been involved with is Haiti, and I learned to speak Haitian Kreyol while I was helping women of color organize unions in nursing homes in the 1980s. In Congress, I founded a new Haiti Caucus last year. I obtained a list of the congressional districts with the most Haitian Americans, and I sought out and listened to a lot of those members. I asked three powerful Black women who represent some of the most Haitian constituents to co-chair the new caucus with me: Ayanna Pressley from Boston, MA; Yvette Clarke from NYC; and Val Demings from Orlando, FL. It's such an honor to work with them. We are rocking!

Additionally - our office eliminated the practice of unpaid internships. All of our internships are paid and we've been proud that it's created opportunities for multiple young women of color to step into this space and gain experience. Unpaid internships mean those opportunities are only available to those with the means to afford unpaid work. I hope all of us in the party can focus on ensuring we have the financial resources to ensure more of our campaign side roles can be paid to allow more people to get into this work.

Another key thing that many people don't know is possible - some of the proudest work I've done has been introducing bills brought to me by constituents. You can and should bring an idea or a problem to your state Senator or Rep - and all of us in these positions should work to create more avenues for people to engage in that way. I'd love to hear ideas for how we can improve that ongoing dialogue with people. We're ready.

Commissioner Gwen Markham

At a local level, the Board of Commissioners makes appointments to many committees and local boards and authorities. We are intentionally reaching out to BIPOC members of the community to ask them to serve. Local boards and commissions are great places for people to start into the system.

Congresswoman Haley Stevens

I commit to coming to the church (and school boards), learning more and joining forces in what's needed to protect these essential initiatives.

VOTING RIGHTS legislation now. Repeal the filibuster. Get it done.

I have seen it with my own eyes and will do whatever it takes to ensure Michigan has black representation in Congress, in State office and beyond. Count me as a partner, ally, and collaborator.

OCDP Next Steps:

1. The OCDP will reach out to Senator McMorrow to put together an educational session on what the role of legislators are and how we can better engage w/ constituents.
 2. The OCDP will reach out to State Representative Brenda Carter to learn more about issues that face the BIPOC community.
 3. School board meetings will be added onto the OCDP website, app and newsletters. The OCDP is working to see the best way to be more hands-on with Oakland County School Boards.
